Meaningful To Behold: Becoming A Friend Of The World

Synopsis

A verse-by-verse commentary on Shantideva's "Guide to the Bodhisattva's Way of Life," this exploration illustrates how to engage in a Bodhisattva's actions by transforming daily activities through a strong, compassionate wish to benefit others. The explanations of this universally loved poem show how to ripen one's innate capacity for love, offering genuine ways to give kindness and good will to the planet and those who inhabit it. With thoughtful illumination and practical applications, the full effectiveness and profundity of this wonderful poem are revealed, giving readers steps for walking towards enlightenment.

Customer Reviews

An indispensable Buddhist work no serious student of Buddhism can afford to be without it. - John Blofeld, United Nations; Geshe Kelsang Gyatso both delights in and has a profound insight into the entire range of the teachings of Buddha. Difficult technical points are rendered into pleasantly readable prose, and the text as a whole is both absorbing and illuminating. - Tibetan Review; Geshe Kelsang has a unique gift for simultaneously addressing everyday difficulties - particularly in his useful and inspiring elucidation of how to control anger and practice patience - and bringing into focus the spiritual dimension in which they reverberate. - Booklist

Geshe Kelsang Gyatso was born in Tibet and is a fully accomplished meditation master, and internationally renowned teacher of Buddhism. Resident in the West since 1977, he is the author of 21 highly acclaimed books that transmit perfectly the ancient wisdom of Buddhism to our modern world. He has also founded over 1200 Kadampa Meditation Centers and groups throughout the world.

An amazing clear concise development of the Mahayana path. I love Santideva's work and this text not only is an amazing commentary but also makes so much of the teachings practical with methods to lead to realization. So many concepts that had been just words are now becoming something that is realized into the midstream. This is an amazing teacher - much like Chogyam Trungpa. Anyone who listens to charlatan that criticize either of these teachers just has bad karma methinks.

Absolutely wonderful book by a great master

Geshe Kelsang Gyatso has written an incredible commentary to Guide to the Bodhisattva's way of life, extracting the essential meaning of Shantideva's precious text and making it applicable to Western practitioners in today's modern world. Geshe Kelsang explains the complete path to enlightenment focusing specific chapters on how to successfully cultivate peaceful states of mind that ensure long-lasting happiness, and how to effectively eradicate negative states of mind that cause suffering and harm to others. He explains in detail how to cultivate bodhichitta, the spontaneous mind that wishes for all living beings to be free from suffering and why that mind is so important for ourselves and others. Geshe Kelsang also describes how to overcome our attachment and increase our love as well as other virtuous minds such as: patience, effort, concentration, and wisdom. He also gives an in-depth analysis of what the ultimate nature of reality is and why if we understand it, we can experience unlimited happiness. This is an advanced text on Buddhist thought and meditation for the serious spiritual practitioner interested in deepening his/her insight into some of the more challenging tenets of Buddhism. It is incredibly inspiring and demonstrates clearly that the author Geshe Kelsang Gyatso is an extraordinary being.

An incredible book but not for light reading. Perfect for studying with a class.

An absolutely wonderful book that should be read in conjunction with "A Guide to the Bodhisattva's Way of Life". I have been studying the book on the Teachers Training Programme and have found it very practical and inspiring.

Although I'm not a Buddhist, per se, and not involved in the New Kadampa Tradition, I have really come to enjoy Geshe Kelsang Gyatso's books. I like the way he writes his commentaries. Despite the differences between Vajrayana and the Vietnamese Zen as taught by the Venerable Thich Nhat Hanh (whose books fill almost one full shelf of my library), what Geshe Kelsang Gyatso writes on the general topics is very similar to what I read in Thich Nhat Hanh's books. I noticed this not only with this commentary, but also when I read Geshe Kelsang Gyatso's commentary on the Heart Sutra, and when I read chapters from his New Meditation Manual and Modern Buddhism. The Meditation Manual teaches counting one's breath in meditation, as does Thich Nhat Hanh's commentary on the Sutta of the Full Awareness of Breathing, for example. What GKG writes concerning the Heart Sutra is similar to what is in Thich Nhat Hanh's commentary of the same Sutra, as far as the general themes. As far as I know, Thich Nhat Hanh never wrote a verse-by-verse commentary on Shantideva's "Guide to the Bodhisattva's Way of Life," but the advices in the Guide and Commentary are very much the same as in many of Thich Nhat Hanh's books. For me, these two writers complement each other. Of course, Thich Nhat Hanh's books for higher level students give more or less the Zen approach, while Geshe Kelsang Gyatso's higher level books concern subjects in Tibetan Buddhism such as Mahamudra Tantra. However, there is still a lot of common ground between these two streams of Mahayana Buddhism, and therefore these two great writers teach many of the same things. If one decides to be a serious student of the New Kadampa Tradition, at that time one would do best just to concentrate on the NKT curriculum. As for me, while I read basic and mid-level books from various schools of Tibetan Buddhism, I mostly read books by Thich Nhat Hanh, as well as poetry from the Shin Buddhist school (Pure Land Buddhism in the way of Honen and Shinran). Yes, I also read books by the Dalai Lama and Robert Thurman as well as the Kaygu Lineage (especially the songs of Milarepa), but since I don't pray to any of the protecting deities in the Tibetan Buddhist schools, there really is no conflict of interest. The main thing is to practice what one learns about breath-meditation, compassion, emptiness (properly understood), the nature of suffering, non-attachment, enlightenment, and etc.

I was at the course taught by Geshe Kelsang Gyatso at Manjushri Institute in Ulverston, England, that served as the basic text of this book. The state of mind of a fully enlightened Buddha is not truly known by many of us in the West; we just don't have living examples among us demonstrating for each living being, the exact same heartfelt love in action that a mother has for her child. In giving this commentary, Geshe Kelsang Gyatso provided the living example one could refer to in oneself becoming a Buddha. Meaningful to Behold is therefore more than an exquisitely clear and precise compilation of method. It is more than a step-by-step manual for the highest personal attainment. It is the expression of pure love expecting nothing in return that inspires us to become the best and happiest people that is possible for us. Nothing inspires us like absolute kindness; this is absolute kindness in its most helpful and instructive form. It shows us how to be happy beyond anything we can now imagine. A very worthwhile book.
